Vent-A-Hood Inducts Seven Employees Into Corporate Hall of Fame

Richardson, Texas – Vent-A-Hood, the company that created the modern residential range hood, recently inducted seven corporate employees into the Vent-A-Hood Hall of Fame at its holiday party. Combined, the honorees have given more than 200 years of service to the company.

“We respect and admire all of our dedicated staff members,” said Blake Woodall, director of sales for Vent-A-Hood. “This is just one way to honor them for their hard work that has helped to build our company into the industry leader that it is today.”

Hall of Fame honorees included: Bob Eugene Norris, Franc Juric, Lenorra Victoria Kincaid, Ernesto Zapata Rodriguez, Cassie Faye Horton, Frank Joseph Morris, and Milton Odene Berry. Each recipient received a custom-designed Vent-A-Hood Hall of Fame ring or pendant designed by the same company that makes the U.S. Olympic gold medals. Each gift features a blue sapphire for 20 years of employment and a diamond for each additional five years with the company.

Woodall said the Hall of Fame would be an ongoing club for the company, which plans to honor all future employees with 20 or more years on staff in the same way.

“We have been a family-owned business for more than 70 years,” Woodall said. “And we are a leading luxury brand across the United States with the help of our dedicated and loyal extended family -- our staff.”
