Vent-A-Hood to Debut New Two-Story Booth at KBIS in Orlando

Richardson, Texas – Vent-A-Hood, the company that created the modern residential range hood, will debut a new trade show booth at the 2003 Kitchen and Bath Industry Show [KBIS], April 11-13, in Orlando. The two-story booth will double the company's previous booth space, will provide a second story for meetings with Vent-A-Hood's national distributors, and will showcase cooking vignettes of the company's latest high-end range hoods.

"As the oldest range hood company in America, we are celebrating our 70th anniversary in style by increasing our presence as well as our booth capabilities at this year's show," said Blake Woodall, director of sales for Vent-A-Hood.

With a growing list of national distributors representing the Vent-A-Hood line of high-end and custom designed residential range hoods, the convenience of expanded meeting space within the trade show booth was a real plus.

"It will serve as our booth and our hospitality suite. And the second story will allow us to meet with our distributors without having to leave the exhibit hall," Woodall said.

Vent-A-Hood distributors from California to New Jersey will travel to Orlando to represent the luxury hood line and learn about the latest advancements in the company's design and function of future hoods.

Vent-A-Hood created a reputation as the inventor of the indoor kitchen range hood, receiving the first patent for a range hood in 1937. Today, the company's products can be found in the homes of Academy Award winners, late night talk show hosts, celebrity chefs and upscale homes throughout the world.
